HENRY GEORGE'S daughter, Mrs. William C. de Mille, recently presented to the Library the books and papers in her possession relating to her father, including his letters, diaries, manuscripts, photographs and many printed volumes and scrapbooks. Consequently the Library now has a collection of real importance relating to Henry George and the single tax. To make this collection easily available to readers is the first purpose of the following bibliography which includes a list of Henry George manuscripts, a list of all his printed works which are in the Library, a representative collection of critical writings, and a section concerning the general theory and application of the single tax.

All articles listed in Poole's Index and other indexes to periodicals are found in this bibliography. Moreover, many other periodicals, American and foreign, which are not elsewhere indexed have been examined for additional articles. Books by contemporaries of Henry George have been searched for chapters, or even brief comment, upon the man and his work, both by his admirers and by his opponents. Some of the items have apparently not been seen by any American writer on Henry George. There is, for instance, a long paper by the present Earl of Balfour, read, according to an editorial in the "Speaker" (London, 1890), "at a conference in London five years ago." This was eventually discovered to be an address before the Industrial Remuneration Conference, London, 1885, to which the compiler of this list has found no other reference than the casual allusion in the "Speaker." It appears under the author's name in Part V. Other interesting items are pamphlets from Australia, South Africa and several European countries, the rare 1871 edition of "Our land and land policy," the "author's edition" of "Progress and poverty" with manuscript notes by Henry George, and, among the manuscripts, the original draft of "Progress and poverty."

There are, however, many other publications not at present in the Library which would add greatly to the value of the collection, and a secondary reason for the compilation of this list is to show what the Library needs as well as what it owns. It will be seen that the number of single tax periodicals in the Library is small and the files generally incomplete. Many of them were printed on a poor quality of paper and are now in a tattered condition. It is particularly hoped that this part of the collection may be renewed and augmented.

Some explanation of the arrangement of this list is necessary. In Part IV the writings of Henry George appear in alphabetical order, but translations of each of his books are grouped by language immediately after the latest English edition. Reviews of all editions are found after the translations.

Part VI includes references to the taxation of land values as practised in Germany and other countries only when the writers consider such taxation a step toward the single tax and explicitly refer to it as such. A long bibliography of that subject is to be found in Yetta Scheftel's "Taxation of land value," Boston, 1916. Readers interested in lists of books for and against the single tax are referred to the list of bibliographies in Part II.

The list of manuscripts was prepared by Miss Mabel C. Weeks of the Manuscript Division.
